The Program

The UW-Madison Volunteer Tutoring Program is an initiative created to help UW-Madison employees. The goal of this program is to empower employees through learning, by matching them with tutors who will work to improve their skills in specific subjects.

Tutors

Tutors are volunteer UW-Madison employees, retirees, students and people from the community who want to help others. Tutors receive training before and during their tutoring experience to help them obtain the learning tools and activities to tutor with confidence.

What to Expect

Learners receive help with English conversation skills, understanding idioms, developing technical vocabulary within your field of study, learning about UW-Madison and American culture, grammar, reading, writing, workplace situations, math, computer skills, or other areas upon request. Learners and tutors are matched based on their availabilities and the learner’s learning preferences. Learners attend an introductory meeting with coordinator and the tutor with whom the learner will be working. Learners and tutors meet at least once a week for an hour.
